The World Bank Group's Government Bond Market Development Program supports the development of local currency bond markets (LCBMs) to increase developing countries' attractiveness for domestic and foreign investment. Government bond markets are the cornerstone of efficient fixed income markets, which are important to support economic growth and reduce poverty. Smooth functioning fixed income markets help governments sustain policy initiatives, better match savers and investment opportunities based on risk-return preferences, facilitate capital market financing of enterprises and critical infrastructure projects, and reduce reliance on foreign currency borrowing and bank financing. Developing efficient fixed income markets is vital for developing countries to make efficient use of scarce capital for productive investments and thus promote jobs and prosperity.

The team works with debt management offices in Ministries of Finance and Central Banks, and with securities regulators, to design targeted or comprehensive solutions based on clients' needs, and to actively support the implementation of such plans.

The team focuses on three types of developing economies:

- Advanced emerging markets, enhancing the efficiency of LCBMs
- Middle-income countries, implementing comprehensive development reforms
- Low-income countries, facing small scale and capacity challenges
