

Imagine gender as a planet.

CISGENDER

If you're most comfortable in the gender you were assumed at birth, that's called cisgender.

All people are born somewhere on that planet, either in Ladyland or in Manlandia. Most people are comfortable where they're born and stay in that same area their whole lives.

Some people, though, are citizens of Manlandia but are born in Ladyland. Just like in the real world, you can't tell someone's citizenship by looking at them, it's very personal. As we get older we may want to move to a place where we are more comfortable.

TRANSGENDER

Anyone who lives outside their expected gender land, crossing state lines, so to speak, could be said to be transgender.

Each country has its own language, culture, and customs. People in one country speak a different language than people in another country.

boundaries change over time.

Some people are born in one country but move to another country.

Some people are born in one country but move to another country.

Some people are born in one country but move to another country.

Some people are born in one country but move to another country.
