Economic Structural Change Peter Hackl, Anders H. Westlund, 2014-03-12 Structural change is a fundamental concept in economic model building Statistics and econometrics provide the tools for identification of change for estimating the onset of a change for assessing its extent and relevance Statistics and econometrics also have developed models that are suitable for picturing the data generating process in the presence of structural change by assimilating the changes or due to the robustness to its presence Important subjects in this context are forecasting methods The need for such methods became obvious when as a consequence of the oil price shock the results of empirical analyses suddenly seemed to be much less reliable than before Nowadays economists agree that models with fixed structure that picture reality

over longer periods are illusions An example for less dramatic causes than the oil price shock with similarly profound effects is economic growth and its impacts on the economic system Indeed economic growth was a motivating concept for this volume In 1983 the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis IIASA in Laxenburg Austria initiated an ambitious project on Economic Growth and Structural Change Geography, Structural Change and Economic Development Neri Salvadori, Pasquale Commendatore, Massimo Tamberi, 2014-05-14 The authors in this book regard the process of economic expansion as a non homogeneous and multifaceted phenomenon which has deeply affected human welfare and cultural social and political change The book is a bridge between the theorists Rosenstein Rodan Lewis Myrdal and Hirschmann who in the post war period analyzed regional inequalities structural change and dualism and the modern literature on economic growth The latter has emphasized the existence of multiple equilibria bifurcations and various types of dynamic complexity and clarified the conditions for the emergence of phenomena such as cumulative causation path dependence and hysteresis These are the typical ingredients of structural change economic development or underdevelopment

Structural Change and Economic Development in China and India Donatella Saccone, Vittorio Valli, 2009 The comparison of the periods of rapid economic growth in China since 1978 and India since 1992 markedly show different patterns of development and structural change However both countries experienced some of the advantages of relative economic backwardness and some aspects of the fordist model of growth China had an anticipated and deeper structural change spurred mainly by economic reforms and the growth of the internal market in the 1980s and since the mid 1990s by a very rapid penetration of its industrial products in the world market However a substantial part of its exports in medium and high tech sectors are due to joint ventures with foreign multinationals India had a more balanced structural change and a slower insertion in the world market although some sectors such as software steel automotive and pharmaceuticals are recently increasing their share in the world markets
