

- To achieve allocatively efficient provision of a public good, consumers should pay a price equal to MC of serving additional user
  - Since  $MC = 0$ , Price must be 0 BUT private market with profit-maximising firms will never provide goods at a price of zero – good not produced
3. (DOES NOT RESULT IN MARKET FAILURE) Non rejectability: Inability of consumers to refuse the consumption of a good once it has been produced

MARKET DOMINANCE (from Firms and Decisions)

- Allocative efficiency
  - Not achieved because firms are price setters and have a downward-sloping demand curve
  - Firms have to lower the price of every unit of good previously sold to sell one more unit of a good  $\rightarrow P > MR$
  - Since  $MR = MC$ ,  $P > MC$
  - The greater the market power, the less price elastic the demand curve for the firm is  $\rightarrow$  greater price setting ability  $\rightarrow P > MC$  by greater amount  $\rightarrow$  more allocatively inefficient
- Productive efficiency
  - MPC
    - Productively efficient from firm's point of view; they have to operate at a point on the LRAC curve due to long-run normal profits (operating above LRAC curve will result in losses and cause elimination from industry)
    - NOT productively efficient from society's point of view; they do not produce at the minimum point of the LRAC (but price elastic demand curve means it does not miss MES by much)
  - Oligopolies and Monopolies
    - (Can afford to be) NOT productively efficient from firm's point of view; they can operate above the LRAC curve and still retain supernormal profits
    - (Potentially) Productively efficient from society's point of view; the output of firms may be large enough to reap significant IEOS  $\rightarrow$  operates closer to MES
    - Oligopolies can waste resources via excessive advertising while trying to differentiate their products BUT this might not be a waste if it moves market toward PC model (perfect information)
    - Monopolies can be more efficient than oligopolies when they reduce wasteful duplication of resources
- Dynamic efficiency
  - Monopoly and Oligopoly (collusive ONLY)
