The Gorbals is a district in the south side of Glasgow. One of the oldest settlements in the city, it grew on the south bank of the Clyde across from the city centre. This led to a mish-mash of unplanned housing which soon descended into slums.

In the 19th century, the Victorians tried to resolve this problem by building a tenement community that contained pubs, shops and schools. However, the population of the Gorbals grew to around 60,000 which caused unprecedented overcrowding and the area once again descended into a slum.

The problem was first addressed by Glasgow City Council as early as 1919 in a Royal Commission. The area was referred to as Hell's Hundred Acres in several newspapers and contributed greatly to the city's grimy No Mean City image with its extraordinary socio-economic problems.
