

The ethnographer's magic as sympathetic magic

With all the attention paid to empathy in recent years, sympathy has received short shrift. Yet it is sympathy that has the longer legacy in anthropology, both as a descriptor for certain ways of relating to the world, and as a moral passion that characterises something important about the relationship between ethnographers and those they study. By juxtaposing biographical accounts of the author's own research with a reading of 18th-century texts from the Scottish Enlightenment on sympathy, this essay calls into question the assumption that sympathy arises from, even as it generates, culturally inscribed forms of empathy or closeness. I argue that what Malinowski called 'the ethnographer's magic' is (or can be) a sympathetic magic woven from biographical threads, depending for its efficacy on concealment and action at a proximate distance, rather than 'shared experience', identification with research participants, or affective appeals.

Introduction

'Don't get too close.' If anthropology were optics, the advice would have made perfect sense. Images blur as the camera lens approaches its subjects at close quarters; details and even recognition are lost. But what could 'don't get too close' mean for ethnography? First and foremost, don't 'go native'. Come back from the field. Learn to distinguish your relatively fleeting participation from enduring affiliation. Adoption into the group you studied might be fine, even something of a coup perhaps, so long as you treat it as a sort of honorary title, like the PhDs doled out to captains of industry or the knighthoods conferred on rock stars. Alternatively, if already judged by your fellow ethnographers to be irretrievably native, in order to have any hope of gaining the 'perspective' (again with the optics!) required to make meaningful observations, you should do your utmost to extricate yourself from the mire of loyalties and tacit knowledge that belonging implies.

In the late 20th century, postcolonial critique and the reflexive turn set this once time-honoured advice to departing fieldworkers on its head. Urgent, ostensibly new objects of ethical contemplation appeared in the form of empathy, engagement and respect. By bringing researcher and researched into a more intimate and presumably less exploitative relationship, many hoped to make morally defensible forms of fieldwork possible for a discipline with a complex historical relationship with inequality and colonising projects. Might closeness or 'life experience' sometimes constitute ethnographic virtues, in the sense that 'insiders' and 'advocates' are positioned to perceive (or come to know) things that more distanced researchers would never fathom?¹ Could shared joys and shared sufferings become a wellspring for what disciplinary ancestors

Ethnographers Magic:

The Ethnographer's Magic and Other Essays in the History of Anthropology George W. Stocking, 1992 George Stocking has been widely recognized as the premier historian of anthropology ever since the publication of his first volume of essays Race Culture and Evolution in 1968 As editor of several publications including the highly acclaimed History of Anthropology series he has led the movement to establish the history of anthropology as a recognized research specialization In addition to the study Victorian Anthropology his work includes numerous essays covering a wide range of anthropological topics The eight essays collected in The Ethnographer's Magic consider the emergence of anthropology since the late nineteenth century as an academic discipline grounded in systematic fieldwork Drawing extensively on unpublished manuscript materials the essays focus primarily on Franz Boas and Bronislaw Malinowski the leading figures in the American and the British academic fieldwork traditions According to George Marcus of Rice University the essays represent the most informative and insightful writings on Malinowski and Boas and their legacies that are yet available Beyond their biographical material the essays here touch upon major themes in the history of anthropology its powerfully mythic aspect and persistent strain of romantic primitivism the contradictions of its relationship to the larger sociopolitical sphere its problematic integration of a variety of natural scientific and humanistic inquiries and the tension between its scientific aspirations and its subjectively acquired data To provide an overview against which to read the other essays Stocking has also included a sketch of the history of anthropology from the ancient Greeks to the present For this collection Stocking has written prefatory commentaries for each of the essays as well as two more extended contextualizing pieces An introductory essay Retrospective Prescriptive Reflections places the volume in autobiographical and historiographical context the Afterword Postscriptive Prospective Reflections reconsiders major themes of the essays in relation to the recent past and present situation of academic anthropology

Magic's Reason Graham M. Jones, 2017-12-06 In Magic's Reason Graham M Jones tells the entwined stories of anthropology and entertainment magic The two pursuits are not as separate as they may seem at first As Jones shows they not only matured around the same time but they also shared mutually reinforcing stances toward modernity and rationality It is no historical accident for example that colonial ethnographers drew analogies between Western magicians and native ritual performers who in their view hoodwinked gullible people into believing their sleight of hand was divine Using French magicians engagements with North African ritual performers as a case study Jones shows how magic became enshrined in anthropological reasoning Acknowledging the residue of magic's colonial origins doesn't require us to dispense with it Rather through this radical reassessment of classic anthropological ideas Magic's Reason develops a new perspective on the promise and peril of cross cultural comparison

Anthropology Of China, The: China As Ethnographic And Theoretical Critique Stephan Feuchtwang, Charlotte Bruckermann, 2016-07-13 Putting China into the context of general anthropology offers novel insights into its history culture and society Studies in the anthropology of China need to look outwards to other anthropological areas while at the same time anthropologists specialised elsewhere cannot afford to ignore contributions from China This book introduces a number of key themes and in each case describes how the anthropology and ethnography of China relates to the surrounding theories and issues The themes chosen include the anthropology of intimacy of morality of food and of feasting as well as the anthropology of civilisation modernity and the state The Anthropology of China covers both long historical perspectives and ethnographies of the twenty first century For the first time ethnographic perspectives on China are contextualised in comparison with general anthropological debates Readers are invited to engage in and rethink China s place within the wider world making it perfect for professional researchers and teachers of anthropology and Chinese history and society and for advanced undergraduate and graduate study

Knowledge and Reflexivity Steve Woolgar,1988 Scholars working in the area broadly described as social studies of science have convincingly demonstrated over the past decade that natural scientific knowledge is a product of social cultural historical and political processes The eight contributors to this volume newly available in paper argue that it is high time that social science itself is seen as actively generated by those same forces The tool that they use to analyze the social scientific text is that of reflexivity at its simplest a term which connotes self reflection and self referral Knowledge and Reflexivity examines the wide ranging implications of reflexivity for ethnography discourse analysis textual analysis medical sociology and the sociology of science A number of contributors such as Trevor Pinch and Bruno Latour are critical of the use of reflexivity Each chapter is followed by a reflexion from another contributor to give an unusual format to the book The contributors are concerned to develop a practice in which the interrogation of the methods proceeds simultaneously with and as an integral part of the investigation of the object Knowledge and Reflexivity brings debates within the social studies of science to a new frontier and will be stimulating reading for all researchers within the social sciences
