Performance Measurement of Hedge Funds Using Data Envelopment Analysis Martin Eling,2013 Data envelopment analysis DEA is a nonparametric method from the area of operations research that measures the relationship of produced outputs to assigned inputs and determines an efficiency score This efficiency score can be interpreted as a performance measure in investment analysis Recent literature contains intensive discussion of using DEA to measure the performance of hedge funds as this approach yields some advantages compared to classic performance measures This paper extends the current discussion in three aspects First we present different DEA models and analyze their suitability for hedge fund performance measurement Second we systematize possible inputs and outputs for DEA and again examine their suitability for hedge fund performance measurement Third two rules are developed to select inputs and outputs in DEA of hedge funds Using this framework we find a completely new ranking of hedge funds compared to classic performance measures and compared to previously proposed DEA applications Thus we propose that classic performance measures should be supplemented with DEA based on the suggested rules to fully capture hedge fund risk and return characteristics

Conditional Performance Evaluation and Style Analysis Bhaswar Gupta,2005

The Performance Evaluation of Hedge Funds

Alessandro Carretta,2008 The standard approach to the evaluation of funds assumes a normal return distribution and uses the variance as a measure of the funds risk A few characteristics of hedge funds such as the remuneration mechanism of the portfolio manager make this assumption unacceptable and the traditional approach of Risk Adjusted Performance RAP must be revised before applying it to hedge funds Some authors define a number of different RAP measures that attempt to overcome the problem related to the lack of normality new RAPs are characterized by a more detailed return distribution analysis that does not consider only the first two moments of the distribution A higher computational complexity may only be reasonable if selections founded on new RAPs permit to identify better investment opportunities than those selected with standard RAPs This work analyses different approaches proposed with a view to calculating the RAP for hedge funds and evaluates advantages and limits of each proposed measure An application of these measures to the European hedge funds market is proposed in order to demonstrate the usefulness of new approaches An empirical analysis studies differences in funds classification based on different measures and demonstrates that the standard RAP approach is unable to identify the best performing hedge funds
