

STAGES OF THE GRIEF CYCLE:

A FRAMEWORK FOR DESCRIBING EMOTIONAL & PSYCHOLOGICAL RESPONSES TO SIGNIFICANT LOSS OR CHANGE.

DENIAL:

In this stage, individuals may struggle to accept the reality of the loss. They may feel shocked, numb, or disconnected from their emotions. Denial serves as a protective mechanism, allowing individuals to gradually process and come to terms with the loss at their own pace.

ANGER:

As denial begins to fade, individuals may experience intense feelings of anger and frustration. They may direct their anger towards themselves, the person who passed away, or even others around them. The anger may be a way of expressing their pain and trying to make sense of the loss.

BARGAINING:

During the bargaining stage, individuals may attempt to negotiate or make deals in their minds in an attempt to reverse or change the outcome. They may find themselves thinking "what if" or "if only" statements, searching for ways to regain control or prevent the loss from happening.

DEPRESSION:

The depression stage is characterized by a profound sense of sadness, emptiness, and despair. Individuals may feel overwhelmed, experience changes in appetite or sleep patterns, withdraw from social activities, and lose interest in things they once enjoyed. It is important to note that depression in the context of grief is a normal response to loss and should not be confused with clinical depression.

ACCEPTANCE:

As individuals begin to come to terms with the reality of the loss, they enter the acceptance stage. Acceptance does not mean that the pain disappears or that the loss is forgotten. Rather, it signifies an acknowledgment that the loss has occurred and a willingness to begin healing and moving forward in life.

MEANING:

The final stage, often referred to as the stage of meaning, involves finding a sense of meaning and purpose in the midst of grief. Individuals may start to reflect on the lessons learned from the loss, the impact it has had on their lives, and how they can honor the memory of their loved one by finding meaning or purpose in their own lives. It is essential to remember that grief is a highly individual experience, and not everyone will go through all of these stages or experience them in the same way. Some individuals may also revisit certain stages multiple times or even experience them simultaneously. The grieving process is unique to each person and may take a different form depending on various factors, such as the nature of the loss and an individual's coping mechanisms.
