Introduction

Who is this leaflet aimed at?

If you are an entertainer who uses electrical equipment for sound, lighting or other effects, this leaflet is for you. Others who use electrical equipment in the course of their work, such as wardrobe or scenic artists, may also find this guidance useful. It sets out basic measures you can take to help control the electrical risks from use of such equipment.

This revised version brings the content up to date and includes:

- changes to legislation and links to further guidance;
- updates to reflect current working practices, equipment and terminology.

For other guidance on the law, see HSE's website at www.hse.gov.uk.

Electricity can kill

Entertainers have been injured and even killed from electric shocks while performing or practising. Make sure your next performance is not your last.

Even a very small electric current flowing through your body can kill you. For example, 50 mA (a 40 W light bulb only takes about 150 mA) can cause pain, paralysis of chest muscles and, after a few seconds, upset the heartbeat and cause death (see Figure 1).

The higher the current, the quicker and more dangerous are the effects.

Risks

Faulty, damaged or incorrectly used equipment can injure you. If you damage electrical equipment, for example a cable, then bare live wires may be exposed.

Apparatus may be wrongly connected so that the outside metal parts become live.

The risk of injury is increased if you are holding an instrument or microphone, as you may not be able to let go if it becomes electrified (live).

Even equipment which does not have a mains power supply itself can be dangerous. For example, on some systems audio equipment such as loudspeakers may have terminals at dangerous voltages.
