Abstract - The overflow of water from a lake or river usually causes flooding. Sometimes, a dam breach might result in the unexpected release of vast quantities of water. Some of the water seeps into the ground, flooding the region. In a station, rivers are involving the riverbanks. Along with a lack of goods and houses, businesses, and offices, street infrastructure floods contain bacteria, sewage from waste sites, and chemical spills, which later cause a number of diseases. The rate of change in river stage in real time, which can assist signal the gravity and immediacy of this hazard, is a crucial piece of information for flood predictions. Understanding the type of storm that produced the moisture, including its duration, strength, and actual extent, is important for determining the possible severity of the flood. In this system, an Arduino Uno is connected to four separate sensors: a humidity sensor, a flow sensor, a float sensor, and an ultrasonic sensor. The float sensor detects when the water is full. With the aid of IOT, these sensor combinations are utilised to predict floods, alert the appropriate authorities, and sound an immediate alarm in adjacent communities to rapidly relay information about potential floods. These sensors provide data via the IOT's WiFi module. When flooding conditions are detected, the system warns the nearby villages and places and estimates how long it would take for help to reach at a particular location. The technology also determines when it might be considered a flood and gives them a window of time to leave in case it does.

Keywords - Flood detection; Arduino uno; WiFi module; IOT; Humidity Sensor.

I. INTRODUCTION

India's annual rainy season lasts from June to October. Rain often falls earlier in June. The rainy season starts in July every year and lasts until October, with little rain falling in November [1]. As a result, the environment and life are lost. Heavy rain, structural problems, and a number of human factors all contribute to flooding. Geography, geology, land use, and the amount and type of precipitation all have an impact on flooding. In 2018, the Indian state of Kerala was ravaged by monsoon rains that were extremely heavy. The southern Indian state of Kerala had its worst flooding in almost a century [2]. More than 374 people perished in only two weeks. 35 of the state's 42 dams were just opened for the first time. Kerala had heavy rain in the late afternoon of mid-August, filling the dam for the first time. Over the course of the week, 310mm of rain fell [3]. India's annual monsoon season lasts from June to October. A few scattered showers occur in June, July, October, and November. The bulk of precipitation occurs in July. The natural occurrence of floods fascinates the worldwide society [4]. Both humans die, and irreversible damage is done to the natural ecosystem. Excessive precipitation, infrastructural damage, and other human-caused factors can contribute to floods. Many variables, including the quantity and velocity of precipitation, the topography, the geology, the land use, and the amount of moisture present beforehand, impact flooding [5].

A system called IoT early flood detection and avoidance is used to recognize when a flood is about to happen. Measuring a variety of things to achieve this, including humidity, temperature, water flow, dam water level, etc. These factors are continuously detected by the sensors in the module, and depending on the findings, prompt action is taken [6]. This module activates an alert system if the data exceed the predefined threshold. The raw data is sent via the internet and used to tweak the system and improve the module's accuracy. Our DHT11 sensor monitors temperature and humidity, while our HC-SR04 uses ultrasonic range to calculate object distance. The arduino Uno receives data from all of these sensors and processes it.

II. DESIGN METHODOLOGY

The majority of bodies of water are easily accessible to humans, but periodically tragedies occur that cause the seas to become furious, sometimes resulting in floods and frequently in the loss of life [7]. In order to alert the appropriate authorities to the danger, the suggested system
