All-Russian Research Institute for Fire Protection

Settlement VNIPO 12, Balashikha district, Moscow region, 143900 Russia

ABSTRACT

The universal correlation for gaseous deflagration venting in coordinates "dimensionless reduced pressure - turbulent venting parameter" (Molkov, 1995) have been verified on the widened range of experimental data. These included a collection of 39 literature experimental data, processed with proposed earlier theory (Molkov et al., 1981-1995). Correlation covers the most wide range of explosion conditions at initial atmospheric pressure: enclosure volumes up to 8087 m<sup>3</sup>; vent ratios  $F/V^{2/3}$  0,09–1,23; initially uncovered and covered vents with release overpressure 0–32 kPa and cover inertia 0–23 kg/m<sup>2</sup>; maximum explosion overpressure down to 0,5 kPa and up to 380 kPa; most dangerous near stoichiometric air mixtures of natural gas, methane and propane; various shapes of enclosures with ratio of sizes up to 4:1; point, plane and jet ignition; with and without complex obstacles and/or external explosions. It has been proved that the universal correlation is a reliable tool for fire and explosion safety engineering.

It has been shown that best-fit method usually used by researchers for comparison of theoretical and experimental pressure-time profiles should exploit two adjustable parameters - turbulence factor  $\chi$  and discharge coefficient  $\mu$  for satisfactory results.

KEYWORDS: venting of deflagration, reduced overpressure, turbulent venting parameter, correlation, theory and experiment, turbulence factor, discharge coefficient, best-fit method
