

5 Key Learning Aspects Your Lab Needs

- 1. Lab training program: Do you have a unified training program or is it left to chance or piecemeal? Ensure you've created a program with purpose if you expect successful learning and operational excellence.
- 2. Valuing team lessons and self-directed learners: Is your lab a true learning organization or are lessons learned not valued? Adults are self-directed learners—embrace their drive for new learning.
- 3. Cross-training: How much has your lab prepared for knowledge or skills gaps? Reap the benefits of cross-training your staff.
- 4. Knowledge, Skills, and Attitudes (KSAs): All three KSAs provide value to your lab and staff. Are you mostly focused on knowledge? Add skills they need and attitudes that drive behaviors.
- 5. Individualized professional development plans: Just as your lab needs a unified training program, so does each staff member. Individual T+D plans should be a collaborative venture with each member taking lead and responsibility for their learning with your mentoring and support.
