

A CENTER FOR DIGITAL GOVERNMENT RESEARCH REPORT | ACCELA

Governing the Future

A national survey on digital transformation shows how agencies are mapping their path forward.

Introduction

State, county and municipal government leaders have a lot to figure out over the next few years. How can they maintain momentum on modernization efforts? How will they respond to new regulatory challenges like short-term home rentals and ride hailing? Which digital services will they prioritize?

In October 2021, the Center for Digital Government (CDG) raised these issues in a survey of state and local government leaders. The goal: Learn how jurisdictions are mapping out their digital future.

The survey captured 133 responses from senior government officials and high-level staff. Roughly three-quarters of respondents came from local governments and a quarter from state agencies. About half of all respondents held leadership roles such as executives, senior managers or elected officials. Respondents also represented the gamut of public service functions, including public safety, administration, public works and IT.

Percentages throughout this report may not equal 100 due to rounding.
