Diffusion, osmosis and active transport are the three main methods by which substances enter and leave cells.

- 1 Complete Table 3.1 to compare the processes by which substances move into and out of cells.

	Diffusion	Osmosis	Active transport
Does it involve random movements of particles?	✓	✓	✓
Does a partially permeable membrane have to be present?
Does it involve particles moving down their concentration gradient?
Does it involve particles moving up their concentration gradient?
Does the cell use energy to make it happen?

[3]

A student decided to investigate osmosis using yam tissue. Yams are root vegetables similar to potatoes and cassavas. He wanted to find out about the effect of different concentrations of glucose solution.

The student cut five rectangular blocks of yam of the same size and placed them in test-tubes labelled V, W, X, Y and Z. The mass of each block was measured and recorded in Table 3.2.

Next, the student prepared five identical volumes of glucose solutions of different concentrations and added them to the separate test-tubes containing the yam blocks. These were 10%, 20%, 30%, 40% and 50% concentration.

The yam blocks were left in the solutions for one hour. After this, they were removed and carefully blotted dry. The mass of each was then measured again and recorded in Table 3.2.
