

THE ULTIMATE GUIDE TO ENVIRONMENTAL REMEDIATION PROJECTS

EXCAVATION

The plan implementation for remediating affected soil is excavation. This means that a hazardous waste management company or similar professionals will dig up all the affected soil in the area, appropriately store it, and remove it to another location for safe disposal.

THERMAL DESORPTION

If excavation doesn't successfully remove all the pollution or contamination from the affected soil, professionals may use thermal desorption. Thermal desorption is a heat technology that increases the volatility of the pollutant or contaminant so it turns into a vapor. This allows the professionals in the area to collect or destroy the vapor accordingly, leaving the once-affected soil in place.

DREDGING

When a pollutant or contaminant affects the soil in a body of water, also known as sediment, there are other plan implementation options. The most popular option is dredging. Professionals excavate the sediment, often using a pump or suction system, and safely dispose of it elsewhere.

PUMP AND FILTER

If the pollutant or contaminant affects groundwater, or water held underground in a particular area, professionals will pump it out of the soil. Once that water is out of the soil, they can filter the pollutant or contaminant out of the water.
