

Bacteria in polluted water can result in a number of infections and diseases such as cholera and typhoid

Dangers of drinking water contaminated with sewage

By ALEX THOM
AND ANNA COX

People drinking water contaminated with sewage are in the most severe cases at risk of contracting cholera or typhoid.

Paul Brits, director for Environmental Occupational Health and Safety at the Gauteng department of health, said although a person had to swallow 100,000 cholera vibrio before contracting the disease, drinking a glass of highly contaminated water could be just as dangerous.

Brits said the department had not been informed of any cholera or typhoid cases related to contaminated water this year.

Moist pads, absorbent cotton wool pads with gauze left hanging in river water for 12 hours, were used to regularly test the water, Brits said.

"We have an intensive monitoring project and have assisted local councils with information campaigns," he said.

However, while many cases of gastro-enteritis were reported in Alexandria each day it was difficult to say how many were caused by river water, said head of Greater Johannesburg's Eastern council health services, Dr Neil Martinson.

He said the council had embarked on a massive education campaign last year after a typhoid scare.

Officials had walked through the river bank areas regularly telling people not to use river water.

"Our saving grace is that the drinking water supply is excellent and everyone has access to taps. We don't believe that many of the gastro-enteritis cases are related to the river water," he said.

Brits said communities were told to boil the water or add a cupful of household bleach to 20 litres of water. He said the contaminated water could also cause open sores to become infected.

In Africa cholera is known to be transmitted by ingestion of contaminated food or water through municipal water supplies, ice made from that water, foods and beverages bought from street vendors, and vegetables irrigated with fresh sewage.

Large quantities of these bacteria can enter the body through the nose, mouth and open cuts. The bacteria in the water can cause varying degrees of inflammation of the stomach and/or intestines.

The person can suffer from temporary diarrhoea, and in the worst case, when untreated, suffer from fever, severe dehydration, and death.

Waterborne bacteria can also cause eye and ear infections as well as diseases such as hepatitis A, which is a viral inflammation of the liver that causes flu-like symptoms, jaundice, and gastrointestinal discomfort.
