

The Globalization of Nothing

George Ritzer

Globalization is not a singular process with uniform results, but a term that encompasses a number of transnational processes. This essay distinguishes between two broad sub-processes under the larger heading of globalization—glocalization (the integration of the global and the local) and grobalization (the imposition of the global on the local). It also explores the distinction between nothing (forms that are centrally conceived and controlled and largely lacking in distinctive content) and something (forms that are indigenously conceived and controlled and comparatively rich in distinctive content). The article focuses on two pairings that result from relating these sets of concepts—the grobalization of nothing and the glocalization of something. In the realm of culture in general and consumption in particular, the conflict between these two processes is a central issue in the world today. The triumph of the grobalization of nothing promises cultural homogeneity, while the glocalization of something offers at least some hope for cultural heterogeneity in a world in which the truly local has almost entirely disappeared.

While social theorists have long been interested in globalization, there has been an explosion of work on the topic in recent years.¹ The flowering of such theories is a reflection of the fact that globalization is of great concern to, and enormous significance for, much of the world's population. Globalization is transforming virtually every nation and the lives of billions of people.² The degree and significance of its impact is visible everywhere one looks, in the shopping malls that increasingly dot many areas of the developed world, the vast array of franchises found in them,

Globalization Of Nothing:

The Globalization of Nothing 2 George Ritzer, 2007-01-18 The Globalization of Nothing is back in a revised and completely updated Second Edition In this reconceptualized volume author George Ritzer focuses his attention squarely on the processes of globalization and how they relate to McDonaldization This revision is shorter more concise and spends much less space on the Nothing Something continuum that he introduced in the First Edition

The Globalization of Nothing George Ritzer, 2003-07-17 George Ritzer theorizes in his provocative new book The Globalization of Nothing that the grand narrative or social story of this period is a movement from something to nothing Building on but going beyond his renowned McDonaldization thesis Ritzer contends that societies around the globe continue to move away from something defined as a social form that is generally indigenously conceived locally controlled and rich in distinctive content He argues that we are moving toward nothing that which is centrally controlled and conceived and relatively devoid of distinctive substance It is in the movement toward the globalization of nothing that something is lost More than likely that something is an indigenous custom a local store a familiar gathering place or simply personalized interaction Thus the central problem in the world today is defined as loss amidst monumental abundance of nothing The Globalization of Nothing takes the subject of globalization in new directions introducing terms such as grobalization the growing influence of for example American corporations throughout the world This book is structured around four sets of concepts addressing this issue places non places things non things people non people and services non services By drawing upon salient examples from everyday life George Ritzer invites the reader to examine the nuances of these concepts in conjunction with the paradoxes within the process of the globalization of nothing The Globalization of Nothing is ideal as a primary or supplemental text for courses in sociology anthropology communication business and related disciplines This book is also recommended for anyone interested in the critical study of contemporary social phenomena
