Explaining Altruism Eckhart Arnold, 2013-05-02 Employing computer simulations for the study of the evolution of altruism has been popular since Axelrod s book The Evolution of Cooperation But have the myriads of simulation studies that followed in Axelrod s footsteps really increased our knowledge about the evolution of altruism or cooperation This book examines in detail the working mechanisms of simulation based evolutionary explanations of altruism It shows that the theoretical insights that can be derived from simulation studies are often quite arbitrary and of little use for the empirical research In the final chapter of the book therefore a set of epistemological requirements for computer simulations is proposed and recommendations for the proper research design of simulation studies are made

Macroevolution in Human Prehistory Anna Prentiss, Ian Kuijt, James C. Chatters, 2009-09-18 Cultural evolution much like general evolution works from the assumption that cultures are descendent from much earlier ancestors Human culture manifests itself in forms ranging from the small bands of hunters through intermediate scale complex hunter gatherers and farmers to the high density urban settlements and complex polities that characterize much of today s world The chapters in the volume examine the dynamic interaction between the micro and macro scales of cultural evolution developing a theoretical approach to the archaeological record that has been termed evolutionary processual archaeology The contributions in this volume integrate positive elements of both evolutionary and processualist schools of thought The approach as explicated by the contributors in this work offers novel insights into topics that include the emergence stasis collapse and extinction of cultural patterns and development of social inequalities Consequently these contributions form a stepping off point for a significant new range of cultural evolutionary studies

The Social Origins of Music Sebastian Kirschner, 2011-10-19 Doctoral Thesis Dissertation from the year 2011 in the subject Biology Evolution grade magna cum laude Humboldt University of Berlin Institut f r Theoretische Biologie language English abstract Creating music is a distinctive behavior of our species Humans of all cultures occasionally gather to make music together However there is discussion amongst scientists as to whether such behavior is a manifestation of innate psychological mechanisms that evolved as adaptations for music or whether the diversity of musical behavior simply exemplifies the inventiveness of the human mind in which case music should be considered a product of human culture Scholars advocating the latter view divide further into those who believe that music is an evolutionary by product existing only for hedonistic reasons and those who argue that certain musical behaviors emerged because they serve some culturally adaptive function The goal of my dissertation was to add new empirical data to this debate by conducting behavioral studies with preschool children In study 1 I tested the hypothesis that certain musical rituals emerged to foster social bonding ultimately increasing prosocial in group behavior I found that joint music making enhances subsequent cooperative and helpful behavior among pairs of 4 year old children In study 2 I investigated the ontogeny of rhythmic entrainment our ability to move in synchrony to a musical beat I found that children spontaneously entrain their movements to an external drum beat at earlier ages and with higher accuracy if that beat is presented in a social context Study 2 revealed large inter individual differences in synchronization accuracy To explain these I hypothesized that rhythmic entrainment develops via social learning processes during early musical enculturation I extended the original design of study 2 by adding a new condition joint drumming without visual access to the partner s movements and a questionnaire about the participants musical experience I collected comparable data from Germany and Brazil assuming that children from those two countries gain qualitatively different experience with music I found that in both samples the differences in synchronization accuracy correlated with those in musical experience Furthermore only German children tended to drum out of synchrony if the partner s movements were hidden from view I discuss my results in light of the above scenarios and come to the conclusion that music s apparent adaptiveness to various instances of its use can be best explained by cumulative cultural evolution throughout the literatures of library history and library and information science but none has coalesced as yet Conversely theories relative to the operation of libraries rather than relative to why their operations are necessary in the first place are exceedingly abundant At the heart of both resides function On the one hand the concept of a library reflects a rational social process its genesis and survival the result of each succeeding generation embracing the same core values as the one before At the same time practice in the library is bounded by both the experiences and expectations of the public and our choice and treatment of topic in our scholarly and professional literature Not surprisingly fundamental misunderstandings are shared among public scholar and librarian about what the library is and why it exists Adapting the work of Kenneth Boulding Charles Osburn presents a cogent well substantiated explanation of why the library refuses to cede its position as a cultural icon and how it not only continues but flourishes throughout the trials and errors of civilization Back cover British & Irish Archaeological Bibliography ,2004
