

FORESTS

Ever as long as man has trod our earth, forests have been essential to his survival and well-being. Today, as in the prehistoric past, from the Arctic Circle to the lush tropics, they constitute one of the vital natural riches of our planet. From these man has received the materials with which to build his houses, his ships, his tools. Good steel pens and other instruments come from forests harked millions of years ago. Paper and its millions of wood by products, as well as food, drugs, beverages, all come from the forests. Forests support the bulk of wildlife and produce the oxygen we breathe. The study of our forests and their enormous variety and usefulness can be a fascinating one, and man has much to learn if he is to preserve their beauty, their wonder and their economic value as one of the greatest of the riches of our earth.
