ght energetic and playful breed and tend to be very good with children but like to dig and bark a lot. They are active and need a lot of exercise and mental stimulation. Boxers have earned a high reputation for being intelligent and working breed dogs. They are not known for being difficult to train and corrections often have limited usefulness. Boxers like to play and are typically very friendly and affectionate. They are a good breed for families with children and are very loyal and protective. Boxers are not an aggressive breed. It is an instinctive guardian and can become very territorial. Licking all day requires a lot of attention. Boxers are generally patient with smaller dogs and usually get along with larger adult dogs. All of the mixes occur. Boxers are generally more comfortable with companionship in either human or canine form. Boxers are very intelligent and are good with children and family. Boxer Dogs What's About Them? What's About Them? Boxers are family dogs. They need enough exercise and training to control their behavior and if you provide for their needs, they will be happy.
