[3]

A student decided to investigate osmosis using yam tissue. Yams are root vegetables similar to potatoes and cassavas. He wanted to find out about the effect of different concentrations of glucose solution.

The student cut five rectangular blocks of yam of the same size and placed them in test-tubes labelled V, W, X, Y and Z. The mass of each block was measured and recorded in Table 3.2.

Next, the student prepared five identical volumes of glucose solutions of different concentrations and added them to the separate test-tubes containing the yam blocks. These were 10%, 20%, 30%, 40% and 50% concentration.

The yam blocks were left in the solutions for one hour. After this, they were removed and carefully blotted dry. The mass of each was then measured again and recorded in Table 3.2.
