

A warm, rustic kitchen scene. In the foreground, a wooden cutting board holds a bowl of steaming orange soup, a green bell pepper, a red tomato, and a knife. To the left, a glass jar with spices and a pepper mill are visible. In the background, a stove with a pot on it, wooden shelves with jars, and hanging pots and pans are illuminated by a warm, glowing light. The overall atmosphere is cozy and inviting.

Margot Finn,2017-04-24 For the past four decades increasing numbers of Americans have started paying greater attention to the food they eat buying organic vegetables drinking fine wines and seeking out exotic cuisines Yet they are often equally passionate about the items they refuse to eat processed foods generic brands high carb meals While they may care deeply about issues like nutrition and sustainable agriculture these discriminating diners also seek to differentiate themselves from the unrefined eater the common person who lives on junk food Discriminating Taste argues that the rise of gourmet ethnic diet and organic foods must be understood in tandem with the ever widening income inequality gap Offering an illuminating historical perspective on our current food trends S Margot Finn draws numerous parallels with the Gilded Age of the late nineteenth century an era infamous for its class divisions when gourmet dinners international cuisines slimming diets and pure foods first became fads Examining a diverse set of cultural touchstones ranging from Ratatouille to The Biggest Loser Finn identifies the key ways that good food has become conflated with high status She also considers how these taste hierarchies serve as a distraction leading middle class professionals to focus on small acts of glamorous and virtuous consumption while ignoring their class s larger economic stagnation A provocative look at the ideology of contemporary food culture Discriminating Taste teaches us to question the maxim that you are what you eat

Marius the Epicurean Walter Pater,1910 Consumers' Imperium Kristin L. Hoganson,2010-03-15 Histories of the Gilded Age and Progressive Era tend to characterize the United States as an expansionist nation bent on Americanizing the world without being transformed itself In Consumers Imperium Kristin Hoganson reveals the other half of the story demonstrating that the years between the Civil War and World War I were marked by heightened consumption of imports and strenuous efforts to appear cosmopolitan Hoganson finds evidence of international connections in quintessentially domestic places American households She shows that well to do white women in this era expressed intense interest in other cultures through imported household objects fashion cooking entertaining armchair travel clubs and the immigrant gifts movement From curtains to clothing from around the world parties to arts and crafts of the homelands exhibits Hoganson presents a new perspective on the United States in the world by shifting attention from exports to imports from production to consumption and from men to women She makes it clear that globalization did not just happen beyond America s shores as a result of American military might and industrial power but that it happened at home thanks to imports immigrants geographical knowledge and consumer preferences Here is an international history that begins at home
